Any criminal act is illegal in the eyes of the law. Hence, if you have suffered injuries because of any criminal activity you are liable to receive criminal injury compensation. However, this is easier said than done. There is a legal angle to it and it will have to be proved in a court of law. Therefore, you will require the help of professionals. However, before you even think of approaching them you must have a proper idea about the criteria you may have to fulfill in order to become liable to receive compensation.

Firstly, the injuries, which you have received, will have to be due to a criminal act. Next, it must be serious enough so that you visit the doctorâ€™s chamber. Finally, the healing process must take at least six months. If all the three criteria have been full filled only then can you think of applying for criminal injury claims. You can then think of approaching professionals in this regard. The other criterion is their fees. Here you can relax, as most of these firms work on no win no fee basis. It is plain and simple. You do not stand to loose anything. It is only after you have received money do you shell out anything.

These firms are completely specialists, in their professions, as they will walk the extra mile to protect your interests. As a client, they will keep you completely updated regarding the developments in your case. If the need be you can also have a direct conversation with the solicitor who is fighting your case. Why only your personal injury? If your near or dear one has expired due to some criminal act, you are liable to seek compensation. Therefore, if you feel you have suffered due to any criminal act you can always contact these legal firms for help.
