Electronic collars are excellent devices for teaching particularly adventurous dogs how to stay within the vicinity of the home. Electronic collars are rigged to work in collaboration with wires places underground around a house and go off whenever a dog tries to step outside the boundary of the house.

Prong or pinch collar is a dog training device that helps to put a dog in check in order to prevent it from acting in a way that you donâ€™t like. The prong collar consists of metal inks that fit together by connecting teeth which point upwards towards the dogâ€™s neck. The prong collar basically pokes the dog into action.

Dogs can cause a great deal of destruction with their chewing tendencies. Usually, when a dog is between three months to six months of age, their teeth begin to grow and itch them causing them to chew on things around the house. You can help your puppies teething problems by getting it a frozen hylon bone to munch on.

The training sessions for your dog must be reliably consistent if you are to make any headway in training it successfully. Make sure that your dog knows when its training period is coming up so that it can get ready for it. Each training session should have a goal to help make it fun for you and your dog. The socialization period is the most suitable time for bonding between you and your dog. During a puppyâ€™s socialization stage, it learns by experience and can easily learn to foster relationships with both humans and its fellow dogs. A puppy learns new behaviors during the socialization stage that helps it learn its masterâ€™s needs.

Donâ€™t expect your dog to immediately jump to obey your every command especially if they are new to them. You should realize that your dog needs adequate time to get used to the commands you are teaching it. Getting impatient with your dog each time you fail to get it to respond will only make it tensed up during training.
