Some people out there obtain hermit crabs as pets and then reckon that they should really feed these crabs exclusively the food that they can grab at the pet store. While serving a hermit crab store bought food is not harmful to them, there are multiple other things that you can feed your new and exciting pet and still have them live a long and healthy and balanced life. This site will cover what hermit crabs eat in the wild, the most desirable diet for a crab, as well as the wide array of everyday foods they can be raised on. Read on if youâ€™ve ever pondered what do hermit crabs eat.

We are still not sure precisely what a hermit crabs nutritional demands are in order to stay healthy, but year after year weâ€™ve learned plenty about what to feed them. Hermit crabs have to have lots of calcium in their diet because of the fact that they have an exoskeleton, meaning that they do away with their hard shell when they have grown. So they can regrow a strong shell, hermit crabs need lots of calcium as it is what they use to harden their exterior. Hermit crabs get this calcium in the wild by consuming small pieces of rock or bones they find on the shore.

Itâ€™s also integral that your pet crab has an abundance of carotene and antioxidants. These will help guarantee that your crab maintains a healthy orangeish-red color. If you note that that your hermit crab has molted and does not seem to be acquiring his color back, he may have a deficiency. You can give your crab things like corn, carrots, or even pesticide free marigold petals to help them get these vital vitamins and minerals.

Aside from just making sure your crab gets the best amount of vitamins, itâ€™s also very important that you feed them the types of foods that they would consume in the wild. Hermit crabs are scavengers, which should tell you they eat whatever they can discover laying around in their tide pool, on the seashore, or the edges of the tree line. This can incorporate things like dead fish, nuts, seeds, coconuts, grass, meat, fruit and greens. A great rule of thumb for feeding your hermit crab is to only feed it healthy things that you mum would have fed you, or the doctor would tell you to eat more of.

Hermit crabs love crunchy food so make sure that you are getting them fresh fruits and vegetables, not old food that has dried out or canned food. Itâ€™s also very important to make sure that the food you give to your crabby is free of any coloring or pesticides or herbicides as these can make your pet very sickly. Many individuals will buy only organic fruits and vegetables to give their crab, or they will give them fish that they have caught themselves earlier that day.

You could give your hermit crabs snacks when they have been good, or when you are just looking to give them an everyday delight. If you are aiming to treat your hermit crab they love bits of dried coconut, as this is a rare treat on their island homes. You can also give them things like brine shrimp (sea monkeys), sea weed, escargot (snails), pretzels, pineapple, and fish flakes.

If you adhere to the above details when deciding on food for your pet hermit crab youâ€™ll make it possible for them to live as long as possible. Many people do not realize that when grown safely, hermit crabs can live to be as old as 20 years and live to be sizeable!
