Pay Per Click Conversion Optimization for Higher Profits by Peter Dulay

Article published on April 5th 2012 | PPC Advertising

By increasing the percentage of visitors who become customers, a business owner can vastly increase his earning potential via PPC. Learning how to do that, well, there lies the problem. Business owners have to learn to manipulate their landing pages to successfully convert these would-be visitors into clients. Doing so can be relatively cheap, but it can also be difficult to perform because of the process required in manipulating the pageâ€™s design and headline, and other little things like the time of the day these pages should be optimized. Aside from the small changes you may make to a web page, you also have to collect data to interpret what tendencies certain shoppers have and how this data can better increase your online sales.

Origins

Online conversion optimization started when e-commerce businesses wanted to improve their web results. Businesses began playing around with the setup of an online page to see how search engines reflected their companiesâ€™ ads and placement on the results page. What many discovered was that changing the layout, text and ads they used made a difference; visitors who ventured to a site had a higher probability of purchasing an item when a webpage was optimized a particular way.

How Conversion Optimization Can Help You

Say you invest in PPC. Your monthly campaign can cost you around $3000 for a few hours of running ads. Now out of those thousand or so people who visit your website, only 10% end up purchasing something. By optimizing your page a particular way, you can increase that 10% to a much higher rate. Many owners may not be familiar with these formatting methods, so they hire pay per click management companies who specialize in organizing an ad campaign as well as optimizing web pages to help produce better conversion rates.

How a PPC Management Company Will Assist You

By reorganizing certain web pages, a PPC will create a better designed landing page designed to help increase the sales of your products. A company may change the layout, text and times in which you launch your sales campaigns to lure in customers. These small changes will drastically improve the number of visitors who turn into customers, making pay per click management services a worthwhile investment for your company.

Online marketing continues to grow more difficult. For online businesses, this means it becomes harder to target the type of customers they want. Online business owners that want to stay ahead of their competitors will invest in strategies that will help turn visitors into customers.
