Summary

The Croatian construction industry has grown in line with its economy in recent years, recording relatively stable growth during 2007 and 2008 due to substantial foreign direct investment (FDI) and public sector investment, and an increase in private residential mortgages. However, following this period of positive growth the construction industry recorded a huge decline: in 2010, the industry was valued at HRKXX.X billion (US$X.X billion), a decline of XX.X% from 2009. The Croatian construction industry has followed a similar trend to the European construction industry over the last few years, with smaller companies being able to adapt more easily to changing market conditions. As a result, there are growing numbers of small companies, while the number of large companies has dropped. Timetric expects the construction industry to record a CAGR of XX.XX% over the forecast period, as compared to the CAGR of XX.XX% recorded during the review period. The growth of the construction industry over the forecast period is expected to be fuelled by the infrastructure market, with a CAGR of XX.X%, and the commercial construction market, with a CAGR of XX.X%.
