Wireless internet open to clients: It is commonplace for every company to use the internet in some way today; however there still remain a large number of Aberdeen companies that use cable connections instead of wi-fi. Whilst this might seem a logical safety measure, it rarely leaves an impression on clients - especially as many will be using internet-enabled smartphones, for browsing, generally using wi-fi.

Clients would be impressed at the ability to use the internet whilst in your premises - however it is important to password-protect your wireless networking, as this could be taken advantage for free by other users, but with careful planning and protection, it can provide a good service for clients. Not only will clients be able to check their e-mails, they can also use their online software, potentially speeding up the process of securing their business, thereby benefiting your company significantly.

2. Artistic decor: A common problem with a large number of Aberdeen offices is having dull and bare walls, which not only show a lack of imagination, but also a poor use of potential. Generally your choice of decor depends on the industry you are in, media companies might put film posters or pop-art up, however design companies based in Aberdeen should be able to work to your design brief. 3. Furnishings featuring a company logo: Why bother repeating the company name if the client is already there? Repetition is fantastic way to create a memorable name and a company-themed office will demonstrate confidence in the business and impress clients further. This can be seen in many successful offices, such as Twitter, who use the design of their website as the basis of their office colour scheme. It is also a good idea to put previous work onto the walls as well as critic reviews, as this can help to boost employee morale and demonstrate positive efforts of the company.
