Property for sale in Liguria and Tuscany by Roy Wallis

Article published on January 16th 2012 | Real Estate

Both these places are very popular for their Italian properties due their picturesque location. The Tuscany real estate market is always booming because this region has a wonderful mix of landscapes and terrains and this area of Italy has many cities that are famous for their art and culture. Tuscany real estate tops the list of places where people want to buy property because it is an epitome of the way foreigners perceive Italy to be, with its rolling hills, vineyards, olive groves and medieval hill towns. The Chianti region of Tuscany is one of the popular areas for homes for sale in Italy. Apart from the tourist destinations, Tuscany also boasts of a number of villages such as Montepulciano and Pienza that are wonders of nature and have been designated UNESCO world heritage sites. Tuscany has one of the most expensive properties for sale in Italy because of the fantastic blend of art, culture, food and weather and also the ever growing demand of investors interested in property in Tuscany.

Liguria is a stretch of land that is mountainous and borders northern Tuscany. The climate of the region is pleasant and one of the major attractions for tourists and people who are interested in Italian property. Buying property in Liguria is also one of the favorites of investors as the region of Liguria is called as the Italian Riviera and is famous for its beautiful beaches, wonderful food, local markets and a 300km long coastline. When you think of property in Liguria, you can choose from a mix of seaside apartments, beautiful villas or charming farmhouses and one can buy both a holiday home and a permanent home in this region. People who are looking for privacy can buy a secluded Italian property on the Italian Riviera as it will be far away from crowds and noise as compared to areas that are closer to city centre or near the beach. At the same time these Italian properties would be very close to both the beach and also the things that you can enjoy in the city. Any property in Liguria will give you a soothing and relaxing atmosphere for which it is famous. There are many cities and towns along the Italian Riviera where you can buy real estate in Italy to enjoy the true splendor of this region.
