Fond of fishing but tired of using your old rod which needs frequent repairs then use fly fishing rods that have an exceptional tracking and torsion stability resulting in unparalleled casting accuracy. These rods are lighter, livelier, quick and responsive so that you wonâ€™t miss out any of those living sea creatures anymore. They are designed to cast an artificial fly usually consisting of hook tied with fur, feathers, foam or other lightweight material. Made using fiberglass, carbon/graphite and graphite/boron composites these rods are fragile and come in different sizes. They have a single large diameter line guide with a number of smaller looped guides spaced along the rods to help control the movement of thick fly line.

But when it comes to choosing the right fly rod then it becomes a bit confusing if you are not well aware of what to look in for in these rods. Going for fly fishing wonâ€™t be enough if you donâ€™t have th right rod for casting. You need to assess the rod material as both fiberglass and graphite possess different properties. Whether you are an expert or a beginner, fiberglass fishing rods are apt for you as they are durable and are also long lasting. Whereas the graphite rods are though a bit expensive than fiberglass but allow more accurate casting. The amount of stiffness or flexibility of the fishing rod is important when you cast and attempt to reel in a fish. Slow action rods have most bend and are perfect for short range casting. But if you are a beginner then you should opt for medium action one which is easy to handle and offers more flexibility with the rod bending in the middle.

Fast action rods are a good choice for long distance casting and reeling of large fish. They are stiffer and bend at the end of the rod making it difficult for beginners to use them. The length of the fishing rod is also essential if you want to become an expert fisher. If you are fishing in situations where you have trees, bushes, streams or other objects obstructing your movement then short fishing rods would be a good choice otherwise opt for the larger one if you plan to pursue a big game fish.
