For ardent fans of Rambo and Star Wars, there is no better way to get the feel of the reel life than play laser tag. This is one game in which the playing field is similar to that of a battleground but without the risk or the pain involved in a real combat. In this, you earn points by tagging targets by using lasers, hence, the name laser tag. This can also be played and enjoyed by members of any age group as the rules of the game are simple but the game is very competitive and is certainly not for lazy bones.

Defense is the best form of attack and in this game; you do this to the core. You sit in the hideouts or away from prying eyes of your opposition and strike with your infrared-emitting device.

For you to do this with success, you need to know your combat zone. If played indoors its fine but playing it outdoors will need you get accustomed to the playing field. In laser tag, you need to start well and scoring the first point is half the battle won, as it puts the opposition on the back foot straightaway. Make sure that you are not the first one out as then you did be an easy victim and if you are too late to enter than too it will be a disadvantage for you as all the safe spots would be already occupied by then. Since laser tag is played in the dark, the color of your dress is a big give-away, so you should avoid wearing light color dresses so as not to be caught out. Moreover, the one skill you need to perfect is hitting targets. Until you get the dot straight, do not give up on practice. After all, striking targets is what you mainly need to do not just hiding around.
