Every online dating websites provider is obligated to undertake certain responsibilities to ensure an exciting online endeavor by all their members.

Operation

Online dating websites must ensure a consistent operation for the benefit and convenience of their members. This means that the online dating websites must be constantly up and functioning. This is the main responsibility of the online dating websites service providers.

There may be times where the operation of the online dating websites needs to be temporarily suspended for maintenance and upgrade works. This is usually executed once a year by the sites service providers to enhance their services. However, this type of upgrade or maintenance works is usually carried out during the lowest operational period when there is the least number of members logging in.

Online dating websites that must perform these operations usually give ample notices to their members with a clear reason and apologies. A minimum of 3-6 months time frame is usually given to members so that any inconveniences can be avoided and no complaints would be recorded. Most members are very accommodating over this operation if it is not too frequent and fast. Most would be happy if the operation enhances their online dating experience.

Data Privacy

Online dating websites are obligated to ensure strict privacy of their membersâ€™ personal data once it is submitted to the service provider. There must be sufficient security measures taken by the online dating websites providers to maintain the safety of their membersâ€™ data. There should not be any leakage of their data without their written permission beforehand.

This is an important undertaking by responsible online dating websites service providers to gain the trust of their members as there are many identity thefts operating on the Internet. All online dating websites members have to read and agree on this point in their membership contract where they are not allowed to modify, distribute, reproduce or post information that does not belong to them.

Members of online dating websites are also encouraged not to post or release their identity or financial information too freely so that they would be scammed or spammed in various ways. Online dating websites members can undergo some online workshop offered by their respective online dating websites providers to educate their members on the safekeeping of their information.

Online dating websites always include a copyright clause on their online dating facilities to prevent their competitors from offering the advanced online dating features that might steal their members away.
