Understanding Confucianism and Its Effects on Online Chinese Dating by Online Chinese Dating

Article published on April 23rd 2012 | Relationship

Confucianism theories and believes have played a pivotal role in influencing the culture and society of China for centuries. While it is still difficult to exactly define the correct meanings of these the theories and philosophies of the great Chinese sage, people have for long being following his teachings in a religious manner and consider them to be a perfect amalgamation of ethics, esthetics, politics, religion and humanism. Consequently, it is only natural for Chinese dating websites to be influenced by the teachings of theories that have been an integral part of the life of most Chinese people for ages.

Most foreigners using online Chinese dating websites tend to misunderstand the Confucian philosophy as they are generally made to believe that these theories are mainly focused on proving the superiority of men over women. However, the fact remains that these teachings were developed in an era when male dominance in China was at its peak and when the people did not give much importance to moral values or obligations. In fact, China as a country was disintegrating not only from outside but from inside as well with the crime and disobedience having become the order of the day. As such it was only natural for these factors to have a deep impact on any theories and philosophies that were developed during this period

Confucian theories stress not only on the importance of an orderly social arrangement, but also on the nature of relationships between people. These theories focus on the necessity of developing the traits of self-discipline and self-development, humanism and moral rectitude of within every individual. The deep sense of self respect ingrained within the minds of Chinese people is one of the basic sentiments of Confucian philosophy which states that in order to win the respect of others, individualâ€™s first need to learn to respect themselves. In addition, various other qualities of Chinese people which attract people towards Chinese dating sites are a result of following the Confucian philosophy of life.
