Roger Hamilton and the Ways in Which Nature Controls Wealth Creation by Corwin Smith

Article published on November 25th 2011 | Self Help

When it comes to doing business in every sense of term, the only thing that matters the most is the profit that both the parties are able to make out of the deal. And that deal that is being made between the two parties is done with only one thing in mind and that is the creation of wealth that would be further utilized by making it revolve inside the operation cycle of the businesses. And if the deal being done involves entrepreneurs then the desire to create wealth is all the more strong and unflinching. But then how many of such deals result in the win- win situation for all the parties involved. And that is the issue that is being addressed by the man named Roger Hamilton, and what a way to bring about that much needed change in the existing system!

And one of the most important, or in other words it can be said that one of the most majestic ways in which Roger Hamilton changed the world of finance and in other words the world of wealth creation is through applying the basic principles of the way the nature moves, to the creation of wealth that includes the various deals between number of parties. And the only way that all the parties that are involved in the deal making can make profits is by applying the principles as theorized in the theories created by the man himself. And one of the most ambiguous parts in the theories that he created was the involvement of nature in the act of wealth creation.

And this was bound to happen. The reason behind this was that till now the people involved in the art and craft of wealth creation had never related the two contradictory notions. One that is more spiritual in tenor and the other that is more materialistic. But Roger Hamilton had to discover an alternate way that would suffice to the desire for wealth that would also not interfere with the fun that is attached to that thing called life. And he realized that since the very creation of human being is an act of nature thus every activity that he is involved in has to be within the parameters as set by the nature for the man himself.

But this realization took a long time that spanned somewhere around ten years and cost Roger Hamilton some where around $130 million. Although in his own terms that period was the best educating period of his life. And the losses that he made were the best investment of his life. And the end result of this turbulent time in his life was the discovery of the real connection between the nature and the way man creates wealth.
