When one is out shopping for weather proof clothing, jackets are one of the first garments that are opted for. These can keep you dry in the rain and will also allow your body to breathe and not feel suffocated in the humidity. However, in order to get this from your jacket, you should be able to choose the right kind. Here is some help in choosing the right kind of weather proof clothing .

Put rather simply a weather proof garment is one that can keep water and moisture away from your body. However the levels at which a garment can do this vary. Some can do it better than others depending on the technology that has been used in the creation of the fabric. While there are certain standards with which a jacket must adhere to in order to be called water proof, most jackets cross the minimum required specifications.

What you have to ensure is that the jacket is a breathable one. If you are going hunting, trekking or uphill, you will be burning up a lot of calories and will be sweating as well. Your jacket will have to allow your body to expel this sweat to make you feel more comfortable. When you are choosing a jacket, comfortability is also important. Look at whether you can roll up the sleeves. Then check for the presence of pitzips as well as a bonded in lining.

Jackets are basically of two different kinds â€“ the membrane ones and those that are coated. Membranes are where the material has been treated at the manufacturing stage itself and have worked at creating a water proof product. The membranes are often in three layers ensuring that you also get warmth along with being protected from the moisture. These are especially good for regions where there is snowfall. The coated one on the other hand is done after the manufacturing process. The water proofing is done by spraying on a special formulation that will make the garment water proof for a short while. You will have to keep an eye on the garment and redo the spray regularly.

Buying the right kind of garment is essential. Evaluate where and how you are going to be using it. Determine whether it is easy to carry around for you or will it add to your burden if on a trek. The area you will be using it in will also help you decide on the weight of the garment that you can comfortably carry. The styling can also be determined that way since those used for trekking are rather different than those used for climbing.
