The Many Advantages of Leasing a Car by Robbert H Cullen

Article published on July 30th 2012 | Self Help

If you want to use a car without having to buy it then leasing a car is your best option. When you lease a car, you get to use it for a year or so and then replace it with another leased car that is a newer model. Leasing allows you to replace your cars as often as you want. This may seem too good to be true but leasing is entirely legitimate. Leasing a car means paying for the use of the car from the leasing company. The use of the car will be limited to the duration of your lease which often lasts for one year to 4 years depending on the lease term you have agreed upon. At the end of the lease term, you can give back the car or decide to purchase it from the leasing company.

Leasing a car is very advantageous because you only need a very minimal deposit. This deposit is a lot lower than the deposit needed when you make a car loan. If you are a business owner then you will surely benefit from leasing a car. Instead of digging into your business capital to acquire a new car, you can just lease one and then use the rest of your money to make your business grow. By leasing, you get to make your business grow and have your own transportation to help in your business without having to spend a huge portion of your business capital.

Car leasing is also very beneficial for individuals who only need a car for a specific period of time. If you are just in the area for a work assignment that will last for a year and you need a car then you might consider renting. The only problem with renting is that it is more suitable for short lengths of time. Buying a new car is also not an option because after one year you will be leaving. You do not want to worry about selling your old car before you leave. In this kind of economy, you cannot really expect to sell your car in a week or so. In this kind of situation, the best option is to lease a car. You just make very minimal monthly payments and after one year you just return the car to the leasing company. You are no longer saddled with the responsibility of disposing of the car before you can leave.
