SMO is related to search engine marketing, but differs in numerous ways, mainly the focus on motivating traffic from sources other than search engines, though enhanced search ranking is also a benefit of booming SMO. Social media optimization is in several ways linked as a technique to viral marketing where word of mouth is created not through friends or family but through the employ of networking in social bookmarking, video and photo sharing websites. In a same way the engagement with blogs achieves the similar by sharing content through the use of RSS in the blogosphere and special blog search engines. Social Media optimization is measured an essential part of an online reputation management (ORM) or search engine reputation management (SERM) strategy for organizations or individuals who think about their online presence. Social Media Optimization (SMO) is not restricted to marketing and brand building.

Ever more smart businesses are integrating social media participation as fraction of their information management strategy (i.e. product/service development, recruiting, employee engagement and turnover, brand building, customer satisfaction and relations, business development and more).
