To get the best value out of your thousands of Twitter followers, you should know how to manage your followers or friends on Twitter. Your Twitter account is an important social media tool to help you build your brand online. And therefore, you should know how to manage and get its best value out of your Twitter stream.

Here are some useful tools to manage your Twitter followers:

1. Followerwonk

It offers Twitter analytics, follower segmentation, social graph tracking, and more. With this tool, you can do specialized Twitter search on any profile data or bios of your followers and their followers and overlay your social graph to see relationship status.

Followerwonk also helps you analyze your twitter followers by age, message volume and other metrics in a chart format; view and sort all of your followers in a spread sheet format, enabling you to view the most influential or least active as well as see the followers between any three Twitter accounts you choose; compare followers and analyze their activity, and unfollow without leaving the site.

2. Tweepi

For free to a small cost, Tweepi will enable you to add, follow and unfollow tweets in bulk.

Tweepi is another tool that can help you manage and isolate people you follow that do not follow you back in a certain amount of dates or users who haven't posted in a certain amount of days and then quickly unfollow them.

For users with a large number of followers, Tweepi makes it easy to sort followers by name, Klout score, or set their own filters.

3. Twepe

For a small cost, you can automatically tweet all of your Google+ status updates. You can also weed out Twitter spammers, do multiple Twitter actions in a single e-mail and do all your Twittering from the same mail. Just send an e-mail to tweet, follow, DM, retweet, and unfollow.

Twepe is also great for searching and getting results sent to you automatically. It lets you receive a daily summary email with details of your Twitter follower activity, including new followers & lists you've been added to, lost followers, friends' timelines, search terms, DMs, and instant email alerts of any mentions of you on Twitter. You can also analyze who you should follow back and spot those Twitter bots that follow you one day, and then unfollow the next in the hope you have followed them back. They offer free trial for 7 days if you want to try how it actually works.

4. Useqwitter

A free Twitter app, Useqwitter is similar to Twepe, but the email summary is sent weekly rather than daily. You will receive a weekly email showing all your Twitter unfollowers as well as helps you identify Twitter spammers and spam bots.

5. Contaxio

With free and premium versions, Contaxio enables you to track your followers and friends across Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn and Google+ to varying degrees, determined by the functionality their individual APIs support.

Contaxio enables you to review your social activity, to analyze followers and your following and take action against those you select. It also allows you to review stats about people you follow and people that follow you and find contacts that share similar interests.

6. Manage Flitter

With Manage Flitter, you will be able to clean up and manage your followers, see who unfollows you, use Analytics to better understand your efforts on Twitter. You can also follow new people to build your followers and link Google+ to your Twitter account.

Manage Flitter can scan your account, when permitted, and then list all of your followers. You can then sort your followers by volumes, accounts they are following, the number of lists they are in and the volume of tweets they have sent. You can also filter out accounts without photo, that aren't in English or are quiet or very active.

Once you've sorted your followers, you can then remove these unfollow accounts in one go.
