In previous time there were web pages which were simple and clear cut. These web pages required only a way for the prospective visitors to find them. And after that came search engines and they started maintaining vast data base of the pages or URLs that were submitted to them. While a search was made, search engine would send spider to crawl different pages and take out diverse information that they found appropriate to the searched thing. Website owners understood the significance of their website ranked higher in the search engine results, resulting in the expansion of organic SEO services. In the start search engines relied totally on the information provided by the webmasters in the form of Meta tags, keywords, index files etc. and this led the webmasters to build choice of the keywords and Meta tags which were unrelated to the website content but could rank them higher in the search engine results.

This led to the growth of unethical SEO known as Black Hat SEO. Search engines soon apprehended that relying too much on the webmaster information had led to abuse and ranking manipulation. To conquer this problem and offer significant results search engines developed more composite ranking algorithms and also integrated those factors that were beyond the manage of webmaster. In the year 2004 search engines introduced a broad range of secret ranking algorithms to avoid the webmasters from manipulation. According to Google its algorithm uses more than 200 dissimilar factors to rank various websites.
