Consignment shops: Best place to buy designer goods at low prices by Allen Benbragg

Article published on August 8th 2012 | Shopping

The avant-garde creations are not solely reserved for the wardrobes of the rich and famous. Even people with insufficient fund to spend on upscale fashionable dresses and accessories can own them. All you have to do is visit a consignment shop and pick up one of the designer products from its shelves. The resale prices of designer products are only a fraction of their original price.

Consignment shops vs. thrift shops

Although both consignment shops and thrift shops sell second hand products, there is significant difference in the quality of products sold at these places. In thrift shop merchandise are sold not for profit. The fund goes to charity. In most cases, you may not find the best quality second hand dresses or accessories here. The donated clothes may be torn or stained. Moreover, you are least likely to find designer wares in a thrift shop. On the other hand, original owners of clothes and accessories sell these products in consignment shops for profit. The revenue is shared by the consignment shop owner and the consignor. It is therefore obvious that to maximize their profit, consignment shop owners will pack the shelves of their shops with best quality second hand products. Free from stain and tear, the items sold in consignment shops are as good as new.

Advantages of buying from consignment shops

Low prices

The main reason for purchasing clothes and accessories from consignment shops is their low price tag. Even cash constraint will not prevent you from going on a shopping trip, picking up quality merchandise at almost throwaway prices. For shoppers who are deterred by the exorbitant prices of haute couture collections, the appropriate place to search for affordable clothes of reputed brands is the consignment store.

Designer clothes

Consignment shops give shoppers an opportunity to boast of their wardrobe of upscale designer garments without visiting an expensive retail store. Reputed consignment stores rarely sell generic goods. They are ready to offer merchandise to their customers only when the designer label is clearly visible.

Earn by selling

The buyers are not the only ones who benefit by purchasing designer consignment online at heavily discounted prices from consignment shops. Even sellers can earn a decent amount of money by selling used goods. Although, you will get only a fraction of the original price of the good, nonetheless, when you are in desperate need for cash, selling designer garments and accessories through consignment shops can come to your help.
