Article Side

Factors to Look Before Buying a Food Processor by Yogita Bali

Article published on March 5th 2012 | Shopping

The question comes in only if you are going to replace your old food processor or decide to buy one for the first time. Unlike fresh buyers, existing users do have fair knowledge. But technologies are changing fast and companies are releasing new makes every season. You need to keep pace with the market!

So this article talks on â€˜how to buy a food processorâ€™ for the first time buyers as well as for those who want to upgrade or replace their old kitchen processor. Take a look.

Size of the family

Size indeed matters. There are different sizes of food processors available â€“ mini, compact and large or full-size. Just as a rule of thumb, mini stands for less than 4 cups of fluid, compact ranges between 5 to 8 cups, large is 9 or more cups.

We know that large processor can do smaller works and â€˜other way roundâ€™ is not possible; but larger sizes consume more energy too. If you have a small family, compact would suffice for regular dinner. However, if you invite friends more often for dinner, go for the larger size. A 9 cup kitchen processor can fit in dinner for 10 heads with ease.

Attachments

People buy food processor for doing all sorts of things like, chopping, slicing and pureeing vegetables, grinding nuts and seeds, grating and shredding cheeses, mixing and kneading. And these activities are accomplished by attachments. So, first time buyers, be more careful on attachments. Few processors even come with additional attachments like, continuous feed shredder and slicer. They make your job safer and easier.

Motor type

Motor-wise food processors are of two types â€“ belt driven and direct driven. Belt driven processors take more space. So youâ€™ll need wider kitchen counter. Besides, direct driven models are more power efficient because they transfer power directly to the moving shaft.

Brands

Brands are important decision maker. Known and reputed brands are no doubt more reliable if you need a help, repair or replacement. This is because they offer better after-sales service and parts are readily available. Lesser known and exotic brands may costs less initially. But they often end up costing more due to poor parts availability and services.

Usersâ€™ Review

Listening to first person experience always helps. They offer inside out views and better insight on any product. Donâ€™t forget to hit review pages before the final decision.

So, next time if someone asks â€˜how to buy a food processorâ€™, you know the features to look for.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/shopping-articles/factors-to-look-before-buying-a-food-processor.htm - Article Side

Yogita Bali - About Author:
Authorâ€™s Bio: Yogita has penned down different write-ups on online shopping.In this article she briefly describes many things concerning a food processor .

Article Keywords:
food processor,food processor prices in india,food processor in india,Home & kitchen appliances

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!