Fitted suits- Smart choice for men

Fitted suits are a smart choice for men as they are comfort driven and look best on an individual. While buying such an outfit one should keep in mind the following.

* Fabric- A man with a fuller frame, be it from added time at the gym or the buffet, should find a fitted suit thatâ€™s slenderizing. Thankfully, given that itâ€™s a slimmer cut, youâ€™re automatically behind th ball. From the get-go, only focus on models made from lightweight fabrics; suits built from bulkier textiles will only add weight, compounding the problem. Let soft, worsted wools are your guide.

* Color- While light colors make the body seem fuller, dark colors have the opposite effect. As these darker colors are slimming, they will do wonders to lighten the appearance of your frame, making you seem lighter on your feet. As for specific colors, choices like black and dark navy are as complementary as they are classy.

* Pattern- For guys with extra meat on their bones, solids work best to create a sleek, slender visual. While loud patterns will definitely work against you, there are still options for finding a suit with added detailing. Since vertical stripes elongate the frame, they are both appropriate and chic. Big guys can also choose tiny, innocuous patterns for a bolder look, but only if they proceed with caution.

* Jacket style- Added cushion on the torso can mean a disproportionate look in the jacket. To ensure the best-looking fit in the coat, remember that two buttons are optimal. The two-button jacket is now the norm and designed to work for all body types. As an industry standard, it wonâ€™t draw attention to your bulky frame, like the modish impact of a one-button jacket or the slimming effect of a three-button piece.

* Shape- While its doubles on the buttons, bulky guys must keep the inverse in mind on the vent; specifically, avoid double-vented jackets. Vents, which are the slits at the back of the jacket, allow more movement. They also attract the eye, so huskier guys may not want to accentuate their backside. Instead, go for a single-vent jacket, which will give you the extra room you need minus the extra attention.

* Trouser- Tall guys have long legs, so their pants shouldnâ€™t make them seem any taller. The best way to prevent seeming any taller than you are is to ensure the pants have a longer rise; the rise of the pants, which is the distance from the waistband to the crotch, helps establish the proportions between the body and the legs. Thatâ€™s why a regular rise will bring balance and symmetry to your already long legs and torso.

With its fast-paced appeal, the fitted suit defies traditional rules; yet, these suits are available right off the rack. Thatâ€™s why, to help indoctrinate the masses on buying a suit of this kind, weâ€™ve compil these foundational tenets on how to purchase one based on body type and oneâ€™s style.
