1. Know the purity

Firstly, the seller should be aware of the purity of the coin in order to reason with the buyer for a fair deal. Although coins have the guarantee of being traded worldwide, bullion bars must be researched extensively before being traded in other countries.

2. Study the market

Sellers should also keep up with the market as the prices of the gold change overnight. You can use this to your advantage and enjoy a high price with low premium percentage. 3. Compare the buyers

Different buyers have different terms for selling and different expectations of gold prices in the future. Therefore, it is important to compare buyers and find the one that suits your standards best. For example, some buyers would offer a higher price for US Gold Eagle while others would offer almost the same price for every type of coin. Browsing through different buyersâ€™ websites would offer you more profitable chances.

4. Organize parties

Gold parties have become very popular lately. Introduced as a business concept in 2008, these parties earn huge profits for participants and some extra for the host. The host can earn between $500 and $2500 per party.
