There are few things more disheartening than hosting a party that no one comes to. This is particularly true if you have gone to a lot of effort to decorate your venue, to buy in lots of drinks and to bake cake and have been looking forward to it for a long time. Apart from anything else this can be a serious waste of money and also a waste of food if it means that lots of things you have prepared go uneaten, and so for these reasons it's important to do what you can to avoid this situation using the various kinds of invitations. Here we will look at some of the ways you can encourage people to come on your holiday and avoid a situation where you end up drinking alone to drown your sorrows...

Make good invitations

Sending out invitations is important as a way to make sure that people are aware of your event, and by getting them to RSVP this will also enable you to ensure you have prepared the right amount of food and drink and so nothing much goes to waste.

However it's not just paramount that you send invitations, you also need to ensure that you send out good invitations that look the part and that get people excited about the event. This way you can ensure that they feel like this is something they don't want to miss and as such they will be much less likely to. So make sure that your invitation is colourful, that it includes all of the relevant information (including misleading invitation is a great way to ensure that people don't make it to your holiday, and finally make sure that it gets the recipients excited for what's about to transpire. (Oh and you need to make sure that the invitation actually gets there too â€“ so be careful writing the address and recipient on).

Save the dates

Save the dates are like 'pre-invitations' and are invites that you send as soon as you know the fate â€“ before you necessarily even have all of the details. This is a great way to ensure that your family and friends don't plan anything else on that day and that in turn will help you to get the maximum number of people. Generally however these invitations are only used for big events like weddings.

Make a Facebook group

In today's world of modern technology it's great to be able to use things like Facebook to help make organizing events easier. In short if you create an event in Facebook this will enable you to be able to update and change details dynamically and ensure that everyone is immediately made aware. Likewise if anyone else makes any changes to their RSVP, you will just as easily be able to see this and will be updated immediately when your number of guests changes.

Many people make the mistake of using only a Facebook invite, but this can make the party seem a lot less exciting and many people are also likely to miss an invite that's only on Facebook.
