

Article published on December 22nd 2011 | Shopping

Christmas can be the best and most exciting time of the year with good cheer and festive gifts aplenty. But it can also spell confusion and frustration when trying to buy gifts for loved ones. Some people just seem easier to buy for than others.

One of the hardest groups of people to buy for are the more affluent among us – the friend or family member that has done very well for themselves and consequently has pretty much everything you could think of. It's a nightmare scenario: you want to get them something special but they already have most of the special stuff available to mankind!

Fear not however, because thankfully there are gifts at hand that won't break the bank, but will still make the recipient's eyes bulge with gratitude. Hopefully the following will give you some ideas for the person who seemingly has everything.

1. Personalised Champagne

Personalised Champagne is a wonderful treat everyone would love to receive. A good supplier will offer a top range of Champagnes and take you through the pros and cons of each. To make it really special, however, you can have a personal message printed on the label; so, you can commemorate a birthday, length of relationship or simply include a personalised Christmas greeting.

2. Luxury Hampers

Again, this present smacks of quality rather than quantity and can be as expensive or cheap as you make it. You can of course buy the whole thing ready made, but if you are on a tight budget, why not put it together yourself? Bought individually, a fine wine and some foie gras doesn't have to cost the Earth but can offer real decadence. Get yourself a nice box to package it up in and the job is done.

3. Scents

You'll struggle to find anyone who wouldn't enjoy a luxury scented candle or oil burner. Whether for purely decorative purposes or used to get rid of the smell of turkey after the big day, these items add a touch of class to any home. You can purchase a luxury scented candle for as little as £10 or, again, make your own gift set by buying a separate oil burner and some candles. Either way, a nice smelly candle makes good scents, if you'll pardon the pun.

4. Luxury towel set

Regardless of your wealth you always need bathroom goods and a top quality towel set can be the perfect answer to the luxury gift requirement. For around £50 you can acquire a towel set that will send shivers down the spine of the recipient and make them feel like royalty when stepping out of the shower.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/shopping-articles/luxury-gifts-for-the-person-who-has-everything.htm> - Article Side

Mark Thompson - About Author:

Customised gifts can be a clever and simple option when it comes to selecting the perfect present for a friend, colleague or relative. Websites such as a The Original Gift offer a wide range of personalised gifts suitable for all, from bottles of Champagne to calendars and toys.

Article Keywords:

personalised gifts, personalised gift ideas

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!