The many pros of consignment shops by Harlan Robinson

Article published on February 24th 2012 | Shopping

Everybody looks for some great deals when it comes to fashionable wear. One of the places that is frequented the most are consignment shops. Often consignments shops are confused for thrift stores. There is a major difference between the two. For one, thrift shops have all their wares donated to them. This essentially means that there is no control of the kind of merchandise that comes in. They may be torn, tattered and stained and the person buying it will get exactly what the piece is worth. For those who bring their clothes to thrift shops to donate, they donâ€™t get anything out of it except the good will of some poor souls and in some cases, a tax benefit.

Consignment stores on the other hand are quite different. They do not accept any product that is in bad condition. Also each of the products brought in have to be from a recognized label and not from a generic brand. Clothes that you buy originally from some discount store are not good candidates for this. Profits from the sale of these consignment stores clothes are split on a 50/50 or a 60/40 basis. There are quite a few folk out there who tend to make a good amount on the sale of some branded clothes that they may have used sparingly. Those who love bargains on big brands will be especially happy with something like a consignment store simply because it gives them products that are branded, in good condition but at a fraction of the original price.

If you have got yourself a designer outfit, wore it once and are pretty sure everyone will recognize it the second time round, then it would be a good candidate for the consignment stores. Clothes such as wedding gowns, tuxedos as well as prom dresses are best found at consignment shops . For those who would prefer to work on a budget for those important events, a consignment store is the best answer. The good thing about consignment stores is that if your outfit is in good condition even after a few wears, they are willing to take it back and sell it again for you. The concept is such that it works as a win-win situation for all those involved. However, you have to be extremely careful of the condition of the outfits you turn in. They also have to belong to a recognized set of brands.
