Trying to improve your search engine optimization in Trinidad and Tobago is kind of like the Holy Grail. There are so many bits of advice on how to improve your rankings and visibility, yet businesses continue to grapple with the utilizing the best methods, and tweaking plans. While content, social media connections, link-building and the like are just some of the SEO branches that boost your visibility online, using keywords is the base, even with pay-per-click (PPC) advertising. While some reports show that just 20-30% of searchers pay attention to PPC, it is still quite a viable method, and one worth paying attention to.

Paying attention to keywords

How many hours have you spent trying to come up with the exact keyword phrases (variants, misspellings, typos and all) only wishing it was simpler? Well, Google Adwords is helping you in your plight with “near exact” and “near phrase” match types. This new ability will help to broaden scope and reach of your keywords.

How it helps

This means that whatever keyword phrases you come up with, they will automatically be matched with plurals, acronyms, misspellings and abbreviations of your words. While this makes the set-up easier, leveragemarketing says it also means being vigilant about the results you get. Monitor the quality of traffic, as broader terms could possibly result in showing ads with lower relevancy queries.

Stick with it

As SEO and the tools that go along with it continue to evolve, don’t let it throw you off track. Figure out how these changes can benefit you, and determine how to work around any difficulties any changes may pose. Staying open and flexible is the key. Continue to monitor every effort, evaluate, and shift course if you want to see different results.

SEO “FYI

The world of SEO is a tricky one, and there are some interesting numbers showing just how effective any particular branch can be. To help you get an idea of what the SEO world is accomplishing, check out these statistics compiled by search engine journal.
