The image appeared bleak throughout the civil war. Because of the outbreak from Feb 2011, the oil industry in Libya continues to be plunging downhill. The Not Security Council had banned oil exports from Libya to prevent the availability of revenue for the Qadhafi regime. Oil companies with huge stakes in Libyan oil were uncertain of lucrative output from Libya. Foreign companies withdrew the oil employees employed in their area which introduced the oil industry to some dead stop. The NTC or even the 'National Transitional Council' has attempted to appease the worry among oil companies by proclaiming that Libya can go back to its pre-war oil creating capacity in around a period duration of several weeks.

Around 95 % from the Libyan revenue is measured from gas and oil exports. Therefore, it's now crucial for that NTC to obtain Libya back in line for oil production also to facilitate revenue for construction for any war ravaged nation. It is vital for that survival of Libya the foreign companies once again go back to the Libyan soil.

The Worldwide Energy Agency and OPEC are doubtful from the conjecture that Libya can go back to its pre-war creating oil capacity inside a couple of several weeks. Though OPEC being an organization has recognized the NTC, it is necessary for those member nations to create bilateral relations to prefer Libya worldwide in the market.

The NTC states the future oil contracts will be presented based on merit and justness instead of political self interest as was the situation within the regime of Qadhafi. Nevertheless the reality appears complete opposite of exactly what the NTC is declaring. Russian and Chinese oil companies happen to be largely overlooked as the NTC is favoring European nations. This is not merely due to their role within the Libyan conflict but additionally because Libya depends on export marketplaces of Europe.

The oil sanctions on Libya were lifted in the Paris conference in September 2011. Libya's oil assets worth $15 billion happen to be unfrozen. It has elevated hope that Libya can soon resume its former oil creating capacity. The way the situation in Libya affects prices on oil within the worldwide market yet remains to appear. Oil prices could either soar or lower with respect to the situation in Libya. The counter measures from the OPEC play an essential part to maintain oil cost in this scenario.

The EU, US and OPEC will have a vital role in repairing Libya but success is dependent ultimately around the Libyan people and also the NTC.
