Internet statistics has an astonishing fact with it with the record number of download of a particular application. The concerned software pack in the picture is BlueStacks, a startup company from California. Founded by a tech giant Rosen Sharma, an Indian born USA citizen, has developed software that enables to run android applications on pc. A user has to have an android device and can download the free software from the website. The software is in its alpha development stage yet it received an over-whelming response and feedback.

It is not comparable with windows 6.5 apps for mobile. BlueStacks is software that creates a virtual environment that makes many of the available android application runs on pc. One can install the free downloadable software from the company website and it can be installed in few easy steps. It gets sticked to the right top corner of the screen desktop and the application can be invoked by double clicking the shortcut icon.

Over 550 thousand people have downloaded the free alpha stage software and is liked by almost all. The fact of getting android on pc on a large screen is very fascinating and was the major reason why so many people downloaded the software. Few android application which uses motion sensing feature or GPS features are not running on pc.

Many windows 6.5 apps are available for free download now days. However, BlueStacks is getting popular more and more with every passing day. With huge financial support from Citrix and AMD, the company has big plans and is planning to launch the pro version very soon. The new version will be able to run the premium version of android applications too.

Android on pc is the latest craze among the android lovers globally. It was found that not only USA, but Europe and Asia too contributed a lot to the download figure. The company has invested a lot in BlueStacks â€“ android on pc and is sure to hit the market with a bang once it releases the pro version. Running android on pc is altogether a new experience worth a try.
