Apps for Android by Maria Gini

Article published on December 30th 2011 | Software

We have been long hearing about apps for Android and Android apps, but Apps for Windows is a newly phrased term. This all became a reality because of a startup company from California, BlueStack. It has designed a fantastic software package with the same name of BlueStack which enables the Android applications to run on any Windows PC, tablet or laptop.

One can now enjoy all android apps on pc with the installation of BlueStack. The company has a strong financial support from two major IT giants, AMD, the famous chip and hardware manufacturer and Citrix, the leader in virtualization application. These two companies have invested over $14 million in the growth of the company and are expecting a huge return. The high hopes from the company did not fail and apps on pc software pack were downloaded by over 550 thousand globally in a span of 2 months only. The company is backed by few other smaller venture capitalists too.

BlueStack, apps on pc, is the brainchild of a true techie, Rosen Sharma. He is the CEO and founder of the company. A user can install the software pack on the windows pc and another piece of software Cloud Connect on his android device. With one push on the device, the application can be transferred to the pc. The new innovative software can be well classified a building bridge between the smart phone and pc experience. It was noteworthy that the features have been seamlessly incorporated to make the entire installation, usage and feel a comfortable one.

A lot of time has been spent on research and development of the apps on pc package. However, it still finds some trouble with Windows 7, but works smoothly with Windows XP and Vista versions. Company is always working on development of designing an android player for Mac users. However, one will have to wait a bit longer for the Mac version of android player.

Wait and watch is the only policy that one needs to adapt to see how the company fares and what price tag do BlueStack attaches for the pro version of Android for windows.
