The evolution of technology undoubtedly brought a lot of conveniences. One of which is the way businesses are conducted, shifting from brick and mortar business to E-commerce. E-commerce, or electronic commerce, refers to the buying and selling of products or services over electronic systems such as the Internet and other computing networks.

This form of business also involves transactions like electronic funds transfer, supply chain management, internet marketing, online transaction processing, inventory management systems, and automated data collection systems. E-commerce is not limited to the Internet; it can also be accessed from a wide range of technologies such as e-mail, mobile devices, and telephones. In this sense, e-commerce has significantly made it easier for people to find and buy what they need.

E-commerce has tools and solutions that manage electronic businesses. Computer programs intended for electronic businesses are a sequence of instructions written by programmers to perform a specified task with the aid of a computer. These programs (executable files) have special instructions that are implemented by the computer; the instructions are similar to those used in the practical management of businesses.

E-commerce solutions, provided by a technology services company, cater to both big and small businesses. They enable companies to acquire and satisfy customers, resulting in a positive financial outcome. Companies that give solutions for businesses and other industries provide open source technologies, which are established with the committed ecosystem of industry partners. This ecosystem provides technologies that complement the tools that the company developed and mastered throughout the years.
