It is basically a free enterprise portal that is used to enable corporate intranet and extranet. The liferay portal development is also known as content management framework and web application framework. The features that a website can offer are also offered by the liferay and the functional units through which it has been made are knows as portals.

Being written in Java, Liferay offers support across-the-board for extensions and add-ins for many programming languages. It is available to run on any Java runtime environment and is supposed to be coupled with an application server. If you donâ€™t have sound technical skills even then you can easily install Liferay on your system although it is a programming interface for Java programmers. These were some of the primary features of liferay and let us look at the five things that you would need to ask your potential web portal designer.

To find the web portal designers, you can post the job on freelancing sites and there are dozens of freelancers who will contact you if you have properly placed your project requirements. Although, it is not easy to find the web portal designer but unless you have hand on experience you canâ€™t separate the wheat from the chaff thus it is mandatory to have experience with web development or web design.

Look for the experienced web portal designers who can show youâ€™re their portfolio and their past experience. If the work done in the past matches your business requirements then you can easily make a deal with them. Shortlist 5-6 of the best resumes and then you need to dig a little deeper like after short listing, invite them for the interview process. Donâ€™t make all the decisions just by looking through the ability of using readymade templates that create boring and flavorless sites. You could ask the following questions to find out whether the designer you have selected is worthy the project or not:

Are your previous clients happy with your work?

Have you worked on similar projects before?

Do you have creative ideas to engage the audience?

Do you use Flash and Java?

Do you adhere to standard web development practices?

Considering all these factors like asking them for the best feedback ever they achieved and ask the companies who have outsourced the projects to that particular designer and look for the positive approach and finalize the designer. It could be the case where you might be finding the designer for the ecommerce site but he has ample amount of experience in other fields and is the best designer ever. In that case, you could ask for a sample from him and if he agrees then you match the relevant business requirements with the sample provided.

To remotely control a Web browser from their program like Liferay, Selenium is also an automated testing tool that allows programmers to interact with programs in a number of different languages including Java. Thus with Selenium Automated testing, you can also make your finding process easier.
