A recent survey in the United Kingdom reveals that forty-nine per cent children aged 12 and under, would not be in their best mood without the Internet access, and one in five would be lonely. Teenagers have developed emotional attachment with the web. According to British research firm, Intersperience, two-year olds also dominate the family iPad and teenagers are the heaviest users of mobile devices. Children below 12 emerged as â€˜sophisticated internet usersâ€™ with 74 per cent playing online games, 65 per cent using the internet to do school homework, and more than a third go online to look for things to buy or sell. They are showing keen interest in wadding through e-commerce portals to check prices for clothes or other fashion items.

No doubt that web or the Internet is exploring the growth and development possibilities of children. A few surveys also reveal that students with the Internet accessibility are performing better than their counterparts who are not. But there is a darker side as well, where Internet attackers are using the web medium to sexually or mentally exploit children or even sneak into privacy or gain access to personal information. A few individuals gradually seduce their targets through the use of attention, affection, kindness, and even gifts. Showing concern about the exploitation of this innocent group few security players have come up with their security software or tools. McAfee Family Protection is one of the software types that aim to safeguard children of all ages from exposure to inappropriate content, social networking risks, strangers, and other threats. Go through this McAfee review to know highs and lows of the software.

McAfee Family Protection (MFP) is a lightweight and user friendly content filtering app available for Windows XP SP2 or Vista (32-bit and 64-bit) - SP1 or higher or Windows 7 (32-bit or 64-bit) operating system. The software is quick and easy to install through the intuitive setup wizard. The first step is to create a McAfee online account, if you don't already have one. It will ask you to create a username and password for each child. It syncs with the default browser and blocks websites based on age category or a customized list. It hosts 35 categories under which you can place objectionable websitesâ€™ URLs and snap off those. Manage the amount of time children spend online, monitor instant messaging and social network, give access to age appropriate TV shows and movies, and do more, and thatâ€™s too remotely. However, give attention to the opinions of tech support vendor, tech media portals, and security software testing labs before deciding to install McAfee software on your system. As the product comes with 30-day trial period plus money back guarantee scheme, hence, itâ€™s better to judge the effectiveness of the software in terms of protection before investment.

Have problems with the security software? Itâ€™s usual, and the causes are also same. Your McAfee product may suffer problems due to software conflicts from any outdated security product or there can be problems with the update or settings. McAfee Support is the point of contact for all such issues, and it can be accessed either through phone or email. No need to go anywhere, as experts can remotely check and fix the McAfee related issues. They can uninstall McAfee and restore it back after complete analysis. Also seek expertsâ€™ assistance in case your software is creating problems with the network or Internet accessibility.

Hence, harvest the best of the McAfee technology to protect your children from the ill-effects of web, so that they can have the right mental and physical development, and can lead to the foundation of a healthier society, family, community and nation as a whole.
