Australian selector committee has included some of the new faces in the national cricket team to have a new attitude in the bowling attack as they select Mitchell Starc, James Pattinson, Peter Siddle and Ben Cutting as the Australian pace quartet for the first Test against New Zealand. The new selection panel took a balanced approach to the injury dramas surrounding the naming of the squad as the jury gives an utmost sequence for the team to see a confident win this time. The jury also recommends that cricket bowling machine should be the first choice for all cricket teams as it develops a good practicing process particularly for the new comers whereas it has been seen many shopping malls and clubs also cater cricket bowling machine providing utmost fun time for every one. Moreover, John Inverarity, the national selector, proposes an accumulation tailored to this test venue.

Mr. Inverarity said with regard to the new selection, "Unfortunately Mitchell Johnson, Shane Watson, Patrick Cummins, Ryan Harris and Shaun Marsh are unavailable for selection due to injury and Michael Beer and Trent Copeland are the players to have missed selection after being part of the Test squad in South Africa. The absence of these players obviously provides a great chance for David Warner, James Pattinson, Ben Cutting and Mitchell Starc to come into the squad and perform on the international stage and I know that is an opportunity they are all looking forward to Although injuries to those key players are not ideal, this provides an opening for these promising young players to come into the Australian squad and further their development.â€•

Mr. Inverarity further added, "David, James and Mitchell have been in and around the Australian limited overs squad at various times recently and showed that they have the talent and skills required to perform on the international stage This is obviously the first time Ben Cutting has been included in an Australia squad and he has impressed us with his performances in the Sheffield Shield this year and this is reflected in his success at the competition's leading wicket-taker.â€•

So, the new faces in the Australian squad may make good possibilities toward a confident win against New Zealand as the new comers are giving much importance to practice with cricket bowling machine and hence, the series may edge a considerable point for them while making true for their selectors comment. As Mr. Inverarity added further, "Trent has had a lack of opportunities to push for selection in recent times. He will be disappointed but will work hard with New South Wales and I have no doubt he will again be putting his hand up for inclusion with good performances for his state."
