Article published on June 20th 2012 | Sports

Unsurprisingly the Olympic games coming to London is a big deal for everyone. Whether you are going to watch the games live or simply enjoy them on television there is no doubt that the Olympics will bring in thousands of people to the capital city.

Since tickets were released some months ago many people have already been organised when it comes to travel and accommodation choices. This can mean that you will struggle if you have left it to the last minute to look at options. The fact of the matter is that London is already busy through most of the year especially in the spring and summer months, so when you combine this with the fact that the Olympic Games are coming you can easily see why you have had to get booked up early.

However just because you havenâ€™t already look at options that doesnâ€™t mean you have to panic. There are load of hotel and guest house options in London which means that whatever you are looking for you should be able to find something to suit you.

If you arenâ€™t sure where to start when it comes to booking accommodation then the internet is ideal. A simple search on Google for something along the lines of â€˜Olympic accommodation 2012â€™ should be enough to get you started. You can then work your way through the results in order to work out which is going to be best for you.

There will be different options open to you depending on what you feel is best â€“ you can either stay near to the ground or further afield. What you need to bear in mind is that you will probably pay more to stay nearer and it is likely to be busier but if you book further out then you are going to have to travel to the games that you have tickets for. When it comes to booking Olympic accommodation 2012 both are great options so it really is about weighing up what is best for you and working out what you want to do.
