Article Side

One on One Training

by Nick Bradley

Article published on January 18th 2012 | Sports

Those of us who consider golf a passion love it for a variety of reasons. We love the beautiful, lush green settings, the challenge, and the thrill of the perfect score. We play with business contacts, friends and family and drop by the driving range from time to time to hone our skills before we hit the golf course. It is a competitive sport, which is why, whether you're new to golf or haven't played in a while, golf lessons are important. Golf can be difficult to master and frustrating to play if you don't have the skills.

You'll find a variety of CDs, books and more online and in retail stores claiming to improve your game or even teach you the skills you need to play golf if you're a novice. They will show you golf stances and how to drive, but the best way to learn how to play golf or improve your game is still through one on one instruction where you can talk it out and actually learn how to stand, drive and be a better golfer up close and personal.

It is a fact that the worst way to learn is by lecture alone and when you start reading a golf book or watch a video tutorial, this is essentially what you are doing. Putters are helpful but often donâ€™t simulate anything close to what putting would be like on an actual course. While driving ranges do allow you to practice your drive there is so much more to golf than simply practicing on the course without one on one lessons. There are so many subtle motions and stances for you to master, not to mention knowing the different clubs and when to use them. Thatâ€™s a lot of information to learn on your own but by hiring a golf instructor and taking golf lessons youâ€™ll be able to master the game in no time.

Golf lessons are usually taken in either a group setting or individually, but individually is certainly the way to go. Youâ€™ll be able to learn more from example by hiring a golf instructor to teach you golf lessons and theyâ€™ll work with you to meet their goals. This means you can establish a goal like a set handicap that you want or perhaps even set drives or putting distances and your golf instructor will work with you to get you there.

The only thing to ask yourself before signing up for golf lessons on a one on one basis is if youâ€™ll have the time to dedicate to the lessons. When hiring a personal coach, youâ€™ll need to make sure that you can meet him frequently and stick to the schedule. It takes commitment on your part if you want to master the game of golf.

Group classes are often cheaper than one on one golf lessons but not as effective. Your golf instructor will devote his attention to you during your lesson instead of having to spread out his time and attention with a group of people. You also won't have to worry about being embarrassed in front of the other students while you learn.

There are so many types of swings to get used to, stances to learn and clubs to choose from depending on unique situations when it comes to golf. With so much to learn, and the game itself to master, you donâ€™t want to fool around in large unorganized classes. If you want to master the game of golf sooner rather than later, one on one golf lessons are the way to go.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/sports-articles/one-on-one-training.htm - Article Side

Nick Bradley - About Author:
Using a very unique blend of Technical, Metaphysical and Spiritual knowledge Nick Bradley delivers a golf lessons , golf performance and a best golf swing

Article Keywords:
Golf Lessons , Golf Performance, Best Golf Swing

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!