Article Side

Do You Have an Invention You Want to Launch?

by William Hauselberg

Article published on December 20th 2011 | Technology

Launching an invention is an exciting process that can bring much wealth and success if done properly. The best way to patent an idea is to follow the process and do all of your research up front to prevent having issues later on. After you have completed the patenting process, create a new product to market and have it manufactured. Here is the right way to approach the process.

Conduct research

The first step is to conduct research about your new invention. You should look at market research data in terms of who would most likely purchase the product and what their needs are. The market research component will help you build a better product and help you promote the product after it has been manufactured. You should also do some competitive research in terms of looking at other similar products are on the market as well.

Do a patent search

Once you have a firm idea of about a new product to market, you should conduct a patent search. A patent search is when you check to see if the idea has already been patented. This is a vital step because it will help you avoid litigation in the future if someone has already patented the product.

Apply for a patent

You can apply for a patent to protect your ideas. It can take a while to get a full patent, up to several months. You will have to complete an application and submit an application fee.

Make a prototype

Make a prototype of the product based on the patent application that you submit. This is really the time when you should perfect the product and hash out all of your ideas.

Contact manufacturers to produce your product

Once you have finished prototype, you can begin to contact manufacturers to produce your product. This will take some time because you will have to be satisfied with both the quality of the product and the revenue sharing agreement.

Market and promote the product

The final step is to market and promote the product. The best way to promote a new product to market is to think like one of your potential customers and consider where they would look first. You can build a website, use social media networks, and even pay for advertisements in newspapers and magazines.

The best way to patent an idea is to do extensive research from the very beginning and get the product patented before anyone else does. You will have plenty of time to perfect the prototype, contact manufacturers, and promote the product later on so it is recommended that you get your ideas down and have them patented first.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/technology-articles/do-you-have-an-invention-you-want-to-launch.htm - Article Side

William Hauselberg - About Author:
The author has an immense knowledge on a a new product to market. Know more about a best way to patent an idea related info in his website.

Article Keywords:
a new product to market, best way to patent an idea

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!