Android on Windows is such a phrase that anyone would jump of its chair if he or she lives in Android world. Using the android application on small size of smart phones was annoying. Then came the tablet, and the greed of people grew more and demanded for more. The general market is never satisfied with any one technology and is always hunting for more. Same is the case with those who are in love with Android. They can swear by it. It is the first application that they use while getting up from the bed and it is the last piece of software through which they bid good night. Android is not only a part of life, but has become a life in itself.

A company from California, USA has developed and designed amazing software that has taken the world by surprise. The company name is BlueStack. They have launched software with the same name and put on free download from the organizationâ€™s official website. To surprise, 570 thousand downloads occurred in just few months only. However, the software is still in its alpha stage and a lot of development and new features are yet to be added. This stunning figure made the IT world by shock and surprise about the success of BlueStack.

With the proper download, installation and usage of software, one can enjoy the Android on full screen. All the data, games and application of your Android application can be synced with your PC or laptop and you can enjoy the same fun and usefulness on the large screen of your PC. However, one cannot use the application that uses the GPRS settings. One needs to wait a bit longer for the pro version of the application to be launched soon.

As the company is backed by two IT giants, the world is expecting a lot from BlueStack. However, only the windows version of Android on pc is developed, Mac users will need to wait as the development is going on with full pace. One must know that the wait would be worth.
