Police Computers – an Overview by James Blee

Article published on February 29th 2012 | Technology

Unlike in the yesteryears when people did not know much about the Internet and how it can connect you to the world around you, today, things have taken an altogether different shape. Today, you will come across the use of Internet in various fields. What is more interesting is that students are also being taught the basics of Computer Science in schools so that they can become aware of the basic functions of a computer. Moreover, computers are also being used in offices, hospitals, educational institutions, shops, and so on in order to make the task less time consuming and also to reduce the laborious and monotonous paper works. The police department is also no exception. To know more about the use of computers in police departments, just read on.

Computers are being used by police officers and detectives for locating the prime suspects in a crime, tracking the status of vehicles which have either been stolen or may have met with an accident, and so on. The list is simply endless when we talk about the uses of police computers. Not only computers, police laptops are also being increasingly used by various police officers as well as detectives. Nowadays, there is no need for the police officers to visit the site of crime or make phone calls to the concerned authority in order to get an update on a particular case. They can easily view the status updates on their computers and laptops. Be it a police laptop or a police computer, they are loaded with special types of software meant for use by the police department. Like for example, mobile phone tracking software is used by the police department for tracking mobile phones that have been stolen or lost
