Why GoDaddy is Not Longer a Top-Quality Hosting Company by John Francies

Article published on November 29th 2011 | Technology

As many of you know GoDaddy is a web hosting service that used to be quite popular for offering good web hosting at a great cost making them a highly successful web hosting company. However, success must have gone to GoDaddy's head because lately the complaints about this company have been popping up all over the net. Here are some of the most common complaints.

It's Secretly Expensive

While once one of the most inexpensive web hosting companies around, GoDaddy has upped their prices while still advertising low rates. Now, most people end up paying a lot more for web hosting on GoDaddy than they expect. This drives more and more people to opt for less expensive web hosting companies like Westropp Studios that offers hosting plans that start for as little as $5.00 per month.

With plans like Westropp Studios in the offering no one really wants to pay the $10.00 per month charges that GoDaddy has been asking most clients behind the promotions and limited time offers.

Poor Customer Support

When people buy web hosting they expect everything to run like clockwork and when it doesn't they want to be able to contact customer support and have their complaint handled quickly and the problem resolved. However, lately GoDaddy customers have been reporting that the customer support at GoDaddy either completely dismisses their claims or tells them if they buy a more expensive web hosting package their problems may get resolved.

A good web hosting company like Westropp Studios offers top notch customer support to all their customers regardless of the price of the web hosting package they take on. After all, providing top notch hosting to the people with the less expensive web hosting packages will give the customer the ability to grow, and that is what Westropp Studios strives for. Westropp Studios will never coerce their customers into buying more expensive web hosting packages by refusing to offer their customers the customer support they want and deserve.

GoDaddy Uses Their Own cPanel Rather Than The Standard cPanel

Some ex-GoDaddy users complain that the cPanel that GoDaddy uses is frequently causing disturbances in their ability to post their blogs and have their blogs read. This means a loss of revenues to the people who purchase their web hosting package through GoDaddy and an extreme inconvenience to people who follow that blog.

A good web hosting company like Westropp Studios knows the value of using a standard cPanel and doesn't mess around with anything because they know how important a reliable web hosting company is to you and your ability to earn a living.

With all the problems people are having with GoDaddy these days is it any wonder that people are leaving GoDaddy behind and choosing more dependable companies like Westropp Studios? Your website deserves a reliable company that is affordable and offers the customer support you need when you need it. Don't settle for anything less. Order a plan now!
