A type of accommodation that provides overnight lodging and breakfast in the morning is a bed and breakfast, often known as a B&B. Some of the features of a typical bed and breakfast are a common bathroom for all guests, and less than ten rooms used for commercial purposes. The breakfast is normally already part of the price paid for the room.

Bed and breakfasts are rather simple by nature. They are good for vacationers and explorers who want comfortable lodgings at a low cost. Compared to spacious hotels, the price of accommodations in bed and breakfasts is a whole lot lower; though the rooms are a lot smaller as well. Moreover, breakfast is the sole meal that bed and breakfasts make unlike hotels and inns which serve a lot of other meals and offer much more services.

Bed and breakfast lodgings are not really a new concept. For many years, explorers all over the globe, who could not spare that much money, would scout for lodgings at private houses instead of inns to save money. B & Bs resulted from this tradition, and are ideal for those who just need a rest stop for the night, and continue travelling in the morning.

Bed and breakfasts more often than not function as a secondary source of profit, though some are managed as primary sources too. Normally, it is the owners themselves who clean the rooms, make the beds, and make breakfast in the morning. Then again, there are also bed and breakfasts that do hire professional staff. Nonetheless, such facilities belong to the hotel and inn classification.

The bed and breakfast Idaho is proud to recommend to tourists provides a different kind of lodging instead of the typical hotel or inn. In Idaho, there are a lot of national parks and historic sites, as well as good business opportunities in food processing, mining, and other businesses. A lot of vacationers and business travelers seek bed and breakfasts near their intended places instead of renting apartments or staying at motels. This way, they get the full Idahoan experience.

One other location where bed and breakfasts are conventional is Utah. Since the place has flourishing tourism and business opportunities, tourists and business travelers also seek bed and breakfasts in Utah for the full Utahan experience. Going back to a bed and breakfast might feel good after taking in the sight of the Grand Canyon.
