Edinburgh is filled with a variety of fabulous attractions including Edinburgh Castle, Edinburgh Zoo, The Royal Yacht Britannia, a number of festivals and rich culture but no journey to the city can end without visiting â€œOur Dynamic Earthâ€•. The science centre situated in the Holy rood area, near the Scottish Parliament building. It opened in 1999 also has an undersea tunnel. The project of â€œOur Dynamic Earthâ€• is supported by Millennium Commission of UK, with a focus on providing better understanding and education of Earth and Environmental Sciences.

â€œOur Dynamic Earthâ€• not only offers a look into the history and creation of our planet since the Big Bang, but also predicts the possible changes in earth in the future. The science centre is at the same time entertaining and educative for both youngsters and adults, who visit to view different 3D and 4D presentations about earth & environmental sciences. The presentations cover concepts, theories and information about creation of earth, the Big Bang &start of time, geology, changes in earth climate, population growth & its effects, and many others in order to create a better understanding about our home planet.

The informative and fun-packed films exhibited in â€œOur Dynamic Earthâ€• are loaded with high quality visual effects and thrilling sound effects to create the feel of reality with some amazing multi-sensory techniques. The centre is a treat especially for children of school going age as they can correlate their experiences of watching prehistoric age earth, dinosaurs, glaciers and rainforests with what they had only read in books.

â€œOur Dynamic Earthâ€• is covered with state of the art facilities, keeping in view all possible needs and requirements of its visitors, some of the facilities are;

Fully accessible to wheel chairs with ramp access on entry and lifts throughout the building,

Free audio guides with detailed information about galleries for the visually impaired visitors,

Written English transcripts of information in both normal & large print versions for visitors with hearing issues.
