Magaluf Stag Weekends: Get Ready for an Action Packed Bachelor Party by Julia Roger

Article published on April 4th 2012 | Travel

Stag parties have been around for quiet some time now. Hence, it would be wrong to consider them a recent phenomenon. However, things have changed over the years. Unlike earlier, stag parties are no longer about hosting a small get together at your residence. Contemporary stag bashes serve to give the groom-to- be a taste of everything he might never get in future. You can never imagine getting wild and dirty with senior members of the family around.

Hence, it is best to organize the stag party kilometers away from the familiar surroundings, in a place where you do not know anybody and no one knows you. This is where choosing the right destination for the stag party becomes doubly important. To be very honest, there is hardly any dearth of options around. However, you ask for the best, we dare not name another country over and above Spain.

Spain again is packed with a myriad of destinations for you to choose. While Barcelona and Madrid are among the most commonly visited places, for a change in taste, Magaluf is a place worth considering. Palma nova and Magaluf have merged into one, which invariably means a dual bonus for you. Therefore, do not think twice before zeroing in on a stag weekend in Magaluf.

From beaches to shops to bars and restaurants, a weekend in Magaluf offers everything that you would ideally expect of a stag party destination. Moreover, the presence of more than a hundred bars ensures that your weekend remains packed with titillating fun. The stag do Magaluf, however, does not end with bar crawls.

There is a good range of adventure activities for you to opt. Shopaholics, on the other, would find the temptation of spending all their money on local goodies difficult to resist. The local streets are lined with a host of shops that sell everything, right from Spanish antiques to designer wear. Hence, apart from nightclub hopping, a weekend in Magaluf has loads to offer to its visitors.
