Planning a winter break in Lancashire by Ashish Pandey

Article published on December 13th 2011 | Travel

A getaway in the winter months is a treat many people allow themselves to look forward to after the fun and excitement of Christmas is over when the rainy dull days of January seem never ending! Many of us find that money is tight in the post-Christmas period so a trip abroad is usually out of the question, but a long weekend away in the UK is often within reach. England is full of beautiful places to visit and the county of Lancashire includes exciting cities, beautiful countryside and coastal resorts so is a great place to explore.

Lancashire has a rich history and plenty to explore for all travellers no matter what their interests. One of the biggest attractions in Lancashire is the countyâ€™s stunning countryside. With hills, valleys and countryside parks to explore there is plenty of rich scenery to see and even if youâ€™ve visited before, the winter weather can dramatically change the landscape so it offers a completely new experience in these months.

If you prefer to spend time in towns and cities, there are a number of vibrant places to explore. Historic Lancaster is full of places to explore including the beautiful Williamson Park which provides views across the country and out towards the Lake District, the city of Preston is home to a number of museums as well as shops and restaurants, and there are a number of charming towns to visit in the Ribble Valley.

Many visitors to Lancashire also like to take advantage of the coastline. The archetypal British seaside resort of Blackpool features sandy beaches and a number of visitor attractions. Many of these, such as the Splashworld Waterpark, Blackpool Tower and the recently opened Blackpool Dungeon are based indoors so there is plenty to do even if the weather turns. Blackpool is also known for its lively nightlife and is popular with groups, so if youâ€™re looking for a night out on the tiles, Blackpool is the place for you. For quieter coastal breaks, visit Fleetwood or Lytham St Annes to enjoy the seaside without the hustle and bustle.

Many visitors that stay in Lancashire are looking for accommodation within easy reach of all the main attractions and close to good transport links, and due to its centralised location many people visiting the area look for hotels in Preston to suit their accommodation requirements. One such hotel that provides easy access to many interesting places in a quiet location is the charming Barton Grange Hotel. Located in a building that was originally a country residence for a wealthy cotton mill owner, the Barton Grange offers comfortable accommodation with excellent facilities including an indoor swimming pool, sauna, on-site restaurant and billiards lounge.

The Barton Grange Hotel is also popular with business guests due to its proximity to both the M6 and M55 motorways and easy access into Preston city centre, and provides a conference centre Preston ideal for exhibitions, meetings and events, so whether youâ€™re visiting the local area for business or for pleasure, the Barton Grange has everything you could require.
