For many, a motorcycle is a fantastic way of exploring the open road and itâ€™s an extremely popular past time. Itâ€™s important, however, to make sure your motorcycle journeys are safe and legal. Passing both your Compulsory Bike Training (CBT) and your theory test, before moving onto a practical test on a 125c motorcycle is essential. To ensure you pass all of these required elements you will need motorcycle training Wales.

CBT training will form the first part of your motorcycle training Wales. Involving an introduction to the bike controls and basic maintenance of a bike, youâ€™ll get to grips with your bike during this part of your motorcycle training Wales. The next step of your motorcycle training Wales will see you move on to practical riding in a Driving Standards Agency (DSA) approved site. Once this is mastered, youâ€™ll receive a theory lesson from your motorcycle training Wales. Finally, your motorcycle training Wales will see you move away from the DSA approved site on to public roads. For many, this is such a vital part of their motorcycle training in Wales. It allows you to experience motorcycle training Wales in a â€˜real lifeâ€™ situation. During this part of your motorcycle training Wales you will be in constant radio communication with your instructor who will assess your performance and, if you satisfactorily pass, issue you with a Certificate of Completed Training.

Motorcycle training Wales will then see you move on to a practical test on a 125cc bike. It is recommended that before you undertake this practical test that you invest in some motorcycle training in Wales on a 125cc bike. The amount of motorcycle training Wales is down to you and will depend upon your experience, as well as your confidence. You may only need a couple of dayâ€™s motorcycle training Wales on a 125cc if you have regularly ridden your bike since your CBT. If, on the other hand, your experience after your CBT training has been limited or if you have found your confidence lacking, you may need around 4 days motorcycle training Wales. Motorcycle training Wales is a great way of preparing yourself for your 125cc practical test and aiming for a first time pass.
