The Happy Canary Islands by Nancy Gallen

Article published on June 27th 2012 | Travel

One of the major features you will find in Spain is the numerous islands that it has to its name. The islands are very popular tourist destination especially because of the many activities and fun that they expose the tourists to. These islands can be the best choice for any kind of holiday destination especially for people who love the sun and sand and a twist of nature and manmade features all in one place.

Canary Islands of Spain are some of the most popular in the country. The Canary is made up of several islands all of which have wonderful climate and the temperatures are mild throughout the year. Of course with so many islands, it is expected that the beaches here are beautiful and numerous. They are made of fine sand thereby making them best for any kind of sport or activity for tourists. The major islands in the Canary group are El Hierri, La Gomera, La Palma, Tenerife, Lanzarote, Gran Canaria and Fuerteventura.

Apart from the major islands, you will also find smaller but quite interesting islands which include Graciosa, Alegranza, Roque, Lobos and Montana Clara. The most amusing thing about all the islands, both the major and minor ones, is the fact that each has a very unique landscape. You will therefore only get the very best of the happy islands by setting foot on the different islands and experiencing their uniqueness. You will be amazed at how different but interesting they all can be.

The historical value of the Canary Island is huge and it is also believed that legendary Atlantis continent was here. The region has volcanic origins and the highlights are evidence on some of the islands of the group. The original population of the island was referred to as Guaches and they were white skinned and tall. It is also here that Christopher Columbus ships stopped on their New World discovery journey.

The happy islands of Canary open numerous opportunities for all and any holiday spent here is worth. Some of these islands have very modern facilities and structure easily making the stay comfortable and most enjoyable. They are some of the places that you can spend quality time with loved ones including children. Apart from the numerous things that one can take part in, there are also so many things to see and enjoy while on the islands.
