Tourist Attractions in Adra by James Avery

Article published on February 25th 2012 | Travel

In todayâ€™s world, with the ever-increasing stress levels, a vacation has become imperative for everyone.  A nice vacation can help to relax and rejuvenate people and for this, one has to choose a nice place which will offer complete relaxation. For an enjoyable vacation the ideal place is Adra in Spain.

Adra is a coastal town in Spain. Tourists flock to this place because of the amazing climate. Whether summer or winter, the climate is always very pleasant and warm and there are no extreme temperatures and one can easily cope with the climate  any time during the year. The sun is not too harsh here and this is what attracts the hordes of tourists who come from harsher climes. The warm climate and the peaceful atmosphere are very relaxing.

Adra History

Like that of any other city in Spain, the history of Adra is also very interesting. This place has also been home to a lot of civilizations and their remains can still be seen in this city, so one gets to see and know a lot of things about different civilizations while visiting this town, or in fact, any other town of Spain.  The Phoenicians were responsible for making the town of Adra an economic center, leading to its improvement in the economic sphere. It was only after this that the Romans got interested in the place and they acquired it. Historically very well preserved, Adra thus offers glimpses of all the major civilizations that existed here and it thus provides important sightseeing sites for  tourists.

Adra Attractions

The beaches of Adra are  spectacular and have, in addition, been awarded the European Blue Flag, which is granted only to those beaches that are maintained well enough to meet the highest European standards in terms of safety, cleanliness, food and other facilities.  The scenic beauty of the beaches here is excellent and relaxing, besides offering tourists activities like snorkeling and diving. One can also go for boat rides and fishing activities. There are also wonderful pathways along the beach where one can walk and relax and enjoy the waves.

The cuisine here is also very good and tasty. For lovers of good food, there is an amazing variety of sea food offered to the visitors. To make it more convenient, there are a lot of restaurants situated on the beach itself.

Visit Adra and have a wonderful vacation!
