Article Side
Visa criteria to meet for moving to Canada by Julia Bennet

Article published on August 17th 2012 | Travel

Canada makes the most obvious choice for aspiring immigrants who are looking forward to relocate their bases. A melting pot of multiple cultures, Canada is the home to people of diverse origins that make the place congenial for all. So, if you are planning on moving to Canada, you will require the license in form of a Canadian visa to be legally eligible to live in the country. Like every nation has its specific essentials, the Canadian visa requirements are also determined by the national jurisdiction. The High Commission section of Canada sets the rules based upon which the immigrantsâ€™ qualification is scanned and judged.

However, depending upon whether you are planning to visit the country, enroll in an university or work for some time with a Canadian company, your Visa requirements will alter. It is said and is by now, a known fact that Canadian visa requirements are incredibly relaxed, due to the low population of the country. In fact, the government of Canada has initiated campaigns to encourage people to come and live in the land for greater scholastic and professional betterment. Those moving to Canada from the United Kingdom for traveling purpose for not more than 180 days do not require a tourist visa.

However, regardless of your current residing country, there are a few things you have to do to ensure that your visa is approved on time. First, you need to check the validity term of your passport to make sure that it has not expired. General and Canadian visa requirements involve the use of free, blank pages in the passport book. A person who has traveled to different places of the world may not have adequate of that. Hence, before moving to Canada, you need to make sure that un-used pages are ample enough to make the necessary stamping before your international travel.

A least of 2 pages requires to be left empty to accommodate the stamping process for moving to Canada. Finally, when you are done checking, confirm if the relocation needs you to have a transit visa for any connection. For this, you need to check with the airline company if they have a connecting flight during your journey to the country. Often transit visa is demanded out of journeyer as part of the Canadian visa requirements when such connecting transports are boarded en route to a destination.

The recent revision of the Canadian visa requirements needs temporary residents in the city to apply for renewal of work permit or studentâ€™s visa so that they already have a new pass before the older one expires. Senior citizens who are grandparents or parents of the Canadian citizens who wish to emigrate for familial reasons have certain new options. There is a particular Super Visa meant for the parents, that allows them to live in the nation for about two years. Renewal will be necessary only when the term expires, and notifications start pouring in from the embassy.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/travel-articles/visa-criteria-to-meet-for-moving-to-canada.htm - Article Side

Julia Bennet - About Author:
Are you thinking of a moving to Canada for a better life? We handle all a Canadian visa requirements for our clients in exchange of a negligible charge.

Article Keywords:
moving to Canada,Canadian visa requirements

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!