Australian spouse visa is for those married or in a de facto relationship with an Australian citizen, Australian permanent resident or eligible New Zealand citizen. You can apply from within or outside Australia. If you are overseas you must be married before you apply for the visa. You must be able to prove to the Australian department of immigration and citizenship that your relationship is genuine and continuing with your partner even if you are married.

In some circumstances it is necessary to wait the 2 year period before applying for permanent residence. This may happen if you have been in the relationship with your spouse for 5 years or more at the time of application, you have been in a relationship for 2 years where there are dependant children of the relationship or your spouse was granted a permanent visa under the humanitarian program or was granted a protection visa and was in the relationship with you before the visa was granted and this relationship was declared to Australian immigration officials at that time.

Australian spouse visa is first granted for 2 years, if after the 2 years, you still meet the requirements you may be granted permanent residence. You may also be eligible for permanent residence before the end of 2 years if your spouse has died during this period, if you and your spouse have children under the 18 years of age or if you or your dependants have been subject to domestic violence during this period.
