Feeling adventurous? Pack your bags for whitewater rafting, and satiate your appetite to the core. After all, when could be the better time than summer to enjoy this thrilling water sport. An experience full of joy and thrills, whitewater rafting is a popular adventurous activity in India. Every year, a large number of adventure-enthusiasts pack their bags to rafting destinations in India, and attain funs and thrills of water. India, with a wide network of rivers & streams, has no dearth of the places offering great opportunity for rafting. Have a look on some popular ones amongst them.

Zanskar River, Ladakh: The most exhilarating rafting experience in India is undoubtedly rafting in Zanskar River in Ladakh. The trip takes you to the extremely isolated and remote Zanskar gorge through amazing views of mountains and forests of Ladakh. Bone-chilling waters at jaw-dropping altitude make it quite challenging, but the sheer pleasure you get make it worth against any effort. The rapids range from class III to Class V, which invites experienced rafters from far and wide. The selection of distance and rapid depends upon your ability and time available.

Beas River, Manali: Though well-known for its natural beauty and salubrious weather, Manali offers great opportunities for rafters too. The shimmering Beas River passes by the town providing an exhilarating interlude for rafting enthusiasts. Rafting at the Beas starts from Pirdi near Kullu, where a number of private operators provide rafting-facilities to visitors. The journey takes nearly one & half hour to reach down to Jhiri, a stretch of around 14km consisting rapids of from grade II & III. This activity will give you an amazing feel of joy and thrills.

Ganga River, Rishikesh: popularly known as the rafting capital of India, Rishikesh has been thronged by thousands of rafting enthusiasts from far and wide. With mixed rapids from level I to V, rafting in Rishikesh is for all â€“ from experienced rafters to novice ones. In a distance of 36km from Kaudiyala, there are 12 major rapids to cross over. However the real fun starts from Shivpuri which is the most courageous and exciting stretch. The final point is Brahpuri where one can enjoy some fun-filled activities like surfing and cliff jumping. Moreover, Rishikesh tour is famous for camping, birding and religious sightseeing in the area.

Teesta River, Sikkim: An experience like never before, rafting here lets you explore astounding beauty of nature and amazing species of birds and plants along the river. The great Ranjit and upper Ranjit are two tributaries of Teesta, which offer great opportunities for whitewater rafting. Special permits are required for foreign travelers. The grade range from IV to V and the best time to visit here is between October and April. While planning for rafting tour to any of these destinations, youâ€™re better taking professional help from a reliable travel agent. Special rafting packages are offered by travel companies to ensure travelers a safe, delightful and stress-free river excursion.
