Pune Airport is worth a visit even if youâ€™re just passing through on your way to someplace else. If youâ€™re going to be staying at one of the Pune Airport hotels in the area you can catch a meal and some refreshments before heading out.

Pune, like other parts of India, has a burgeoning and empowered younger population and the facilities on offer reflect a youthful outlook, with plans in the pipeline for extending franchises to some familiar names in the fast food sector. Fast food is taking off even in this ancient region of India (Maharashtra) with its roots in long tradition and habitual eschewing of modern customs and morals.

On the other hand, India is a continent on the move, and Pune Airport is looking to keep up with the new demands of its student population as well as the aspirations of other regular flyers. At present there is only the one eatery in the airport but this will all be changing in the near future.

Internationally established brands are showing a strong interest in establishing themselves here and the bidding is already underway. There are many international food outlets in and around the city and these are showing the most interest in opening up a restaurant within the airport itself.

Duty Free shops were only opened here very recently, and the response has been so positive that the whole airport is looking to expand its facilities and services as it becomes an increasingly important travel hub for the region.
