Work visa Canada is for people who are not Canadian citizens and wish to work temporarily in Canada. A work visa is issued if the application is accepted and is mostly needed for temporary jobs. To obtain a work visa Canada you must have a valid offer of arranged employment from a Canadian employer and he/she must then apply for Labour market opinion, you then apply for work visa through citizenship and immigration Canada.

It is the responsibility of the employer to obtain the LMO on the employeeâ€™s behalf and this must be obtained before you can apply for the work visa. The purpose of the LMO is that the department of human resources and social development Canada (HRSCD) can verify that the job offered to you cannot be filled by a Canadian citizen or permanent resident.

The following are the different type of work visa:

â€¢ Skilled worker Canada is a point based system for foreign workers with skills and who wish to work in Canada. This visa can lead to permanent resident and is designed for those wishing to immigrate to Canada.

â€¢ Post study work visa allows students who have graduated from a Canadian university to work in Canada in order to gain experience.

â€¢ Work permit is for those who have an offer of employment from a Canadian employer and is not a point based and does not lead to permanent residency.

Student visa Canada is for those who wish to study in a Canadian school, college or university. The visa is valid for the period of your studies. You should have a valid letter of acceptance from an educational institution, should have adequate funds available to pay for the tuition fee and living expenses for you and any dependant with you. You should be law abiding and have no records of criminal activity, be in good health and you should not be a risk to the security of Canada. The Canadian immigration authorities will access you to determine whether they believe you will likely returns to your country after completion of your studies in Canada.
